FAMOUS CLIENTS: A decade before most Americans had even heard of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, after examining the birthmark on his forehead, Rhinehart correctly predicted that he would "play a major role in world politics." Gorbachev later played a key role in ending the Cold War.

CHANCES NOW 1-IN-6 YOU HAVE A SPOOKY DOUBLE!

THE ANCIENT German legend about creepy "doppelgangers" is actually coming true — thanks largely to the Internet, experts warn.

According to the spooky old folk tales, some people have a doppelganger, a mysterious double that walks the Earth and is often mistaken for the real McCoy.

And, thanks to the modern-day epidemic of identity theft, it's estimated that one out of eight persons now has a fake who goes around the country pretending to be them.

"Like the doppelganger of legend, these mysterious doubles never cross paths with the real person and often engage in illicit conduct, going on spending sprees, charging huge amounts in topless bars, etc.," notes sociologist Mark Astonfred.

"Ironically, it is modern technology — principally the Internet, through which hackers often commit identity theft — that is responsible for bringing this creature of myth into

REVEAL YOUR PAST — & YOUR FUTURE

— says top expert!

BIRTHMARKS provide exciting clues to your previous lives as well as your future destiny, a top expert claims!

"Far from being random blemishes that should be ignored or removed by a dermatologist, birthmarks — including freckles and moles — are sign posts that are placed on our bodies by a higher power to guide us through our many lives," declares leading astrologer and reincarnation expert Werner Rhinehart of Berlin. "They are a far more reliable source of information than the lines on your palms."

Rhinehart is one of fewer than 90 experts worldwide who specialise in reading birthmarks. His clients, who number at least 5,000, include wealthy European actors, rock stars, business leaders and even politicians who all praise what they call the "uncanny accuracy" of his method.

He says he began researching birthmarks 25 years ago.

"I was intrigued that identical twins often have strikingly different birthmarks," Rhinehart says. "It occurred to me that might be because each one has a different past life and a different future."

Rhinehart says that birthmarks often occur where you received wounds in a previous life — particularly fatal wounds.

"A birthmark shaped like a lion on your chest might suggest that you were bitten there by one in a previous life," he explains. "Perhaps you were a Christian martyr fed to hungry lions in a [illegible] tion. A small [illegible]-shaped birthmark on your cheek, for example, would indicate at least one past life was in Italy.

The total number of birthmarks points to the number of lives you've already lived — whether you're a "young soul" or an "old soul."

"It's important to count all the birthmarks on your body, including the small ones," Rhinehart notes. "And don't forget about inaccessible places like the buttocks. That's why you generally need a helper."

The expert says that if you properly connect the birthmarks with a pen, they reveal the constellation that rules your secret destiny. Each of the 88 constellations is associated with specific personality traits. Someone influenced by Orion, for example, tends to be brave, honest and impulsive.

"This is your true 'sign', the one that really governs your future — not some arbitrary date you happen to have been born on," Rhinehart declares. "The ancients believed that the stars powerfully influence our personalities and our lives. And it turns out a map revealing exactly which set of stars is emblazoned on our own skins."

COUPLE GIVE SPERM BANK OVER "REALITY" CHILD

Parents are suing an Australian sperm bank, charging that the clinic caused them to have a child who's "disappointing and ordinary."

"They must have given us some faulty sperm," says Brisbane mom Natalie Crispin, 32, who had artificial insemination and gave birth to a baby girl two years ago. "We specifically chose a donor who we were led to believe was a genius. But if he was, it's not showing in this child — she's just started talking, like any other 2-year-old, and she's still in diapers. Goodness knows how she'll ever get into the right preschool, at this rate."

Officials at Select Genetics, in Brisbane, could not be reached for comment.

Crispin insists she and husband Mark "dearly love the child," but they're seeking unspecified damages to cover the cost of tutors and other special expenses "to correct her disappointing and ordinary intellect."

STUDENT DRIVER CRASHES INTO RIVER

An 81-year-old woman flunked her driving test in a big way: She drove into a river!

Officials in Thunder Bay, Ontario, say the woman was backing out of a parking space and just kept going. The car continued for about 25 yards, zoomed down a steep embankment, and landed in a shallow river.

Neither the driver nor her examiner was hurt, but the woman's pride may never recover. It was the sixth time she had tried — and failed — to pass the test.

WHAT A WEDDING PRESENT WE COULD HAVE GIVEN THEM

...& just imagine what their kids might look like!

Dear Editor:

Regarding your story in the issue of Oct. 7, 2003 concerning the wedding of Saddam Hussein and Osama bin Laden. I can't believe the CIA missed such a golden opportunity to take care of the both of them in one fell swoop. I mean, hello! Where were you guys? It should have been an easy matter to smuggle in a bomb tricked up to look like a wedding present with a card attached that read "Dear Osama and Saddam, best wishes for many wonderful years together — in HELL!! Signed, the Good Ol' U.S. of A." The opening of the card could have tripped a timer set to give them just long enough to realize they were screwed, and then KA-BOOM, the two most evil men in the world and possibly scores of their henchmen would have been history — Mark J., Dallas, Texas

That's such a great scenario, Mark, that we have to wonder why you don't join the CIA yourself.

Dear Editor:

I hope you print my letter because I have some things to say to anyone who might be a space alien who reads your paper.

Letter of the Week

Dear Editor:

In your issue of Oct. 7, 2003, you ran a story listing the 10 bad thoughts that will condemn people to Hell. Imagine my dismay when I realized that, not only have I had all of these thoughts, I have them on an almost daily basis! I've tried to control myself, but that only works to a small extent. What am I supposed to do? — Billy H., Montauk Point, Long Island, N.Y.

We're afraid there's not much you can do, Billy. Just make sure your loved ones bury you in an asbestos suit when you die and hope for the best.

In your issue dated Sept. 2, 2003, you featured an article about aliens turning anorexic in order to live up to the way we portray them in films and TV as very thin and spindly. To these aliens, I say:

Don't do that to yourselves! Please! So what if we portray you the way we do? I speak on behalf of the vast majority of Earthlings when I say you should be true to yourselves and stay healthy! If we eventually find out that you have died out because of our lame short-sightedness, we would never be able to forgive ourselves!

Excellent job, Weekly World News. Please continue to bring your readers important stories of interplanetary affairs such as this. — Gary S., Arcadia, Wis.

Don't worry, Gary. With our uniquely extensive contacts in the alien community, we can guarantee that WWN will always be on the cutting edge of extraterrestrial news.

Dear Editor:

In the past you've run stories about catlike animals breeding at an alarming rate and attacking homes. Then, in the Sept. 30, 2003 issue of WWN, you state that the homeless are mutating to better fit their environment. Will these mutations help the street people defend themselves against the bloodthirsty animals? I'm concerned about the well-being of America's less fortunate! — Daniel S., Hawley, Penn.

Indeed, Daniel, reports have been coming into WWN that more and more of these catlike creatures are being found dead in U.S. cities, while the incidence of homeless folks coming to a violent end is declining.

Dear Editor:

Thank you so much for warning the public of the vampire menace in your issue of Oct. 7, 2003. Now I can finally sleep at night knowing that I'm safe from the undead. — Jeff, Internet

Actually, Jeff, we're not sure that you're safe. Vampires are very resourceful creatures, and we're sure they'll find a way to get to you. Have you considered sleeping with holy water? — John P. Bethlehem, Pa.

Brilliant idea, John! Also, a steady diet of garlic-rich Italian food will work wonders in keeping even the most bloodthirsty vamps at bay. The downside is many of your friends and family will probably keep their distance, too! But wouldn't it be worth it if it prevents you from joining the ranks of the undead?

FOR SALE: SEX SLAVES!

By AHMAD FREIHA
Correspondent

BEAUTIFUL women from half a dozen eastern European countries are being kidnapped and sold as pitiful love slaves in the bustling underground "sex markets" of Saudi Arabia, Libya, Iran, Yemen and Oman.

And while the swarthy sheiks and terrorists who buy the ladies consider just about any "Euro-babe," as victims are called, to be a trophy catch, blue-eyed blondes in their teens and early 20s are prized above all — and can fetch as much as $100,000 on the auction block.

"The traffic in female slaves for the Middle East is big and getting bigger," says weeping-girl Margaret Blythe Ronsard, author of the eye-opening new book, Women For Sale: The True Price of White Slavery in the New Millennium.

"Since January alone, as many as 10,000 women have been bought and sold in secret slave markets in the desert.

"Victims are drugged and kidnapped in eastern European nations and are then flown to the Middle East where they command huge prices.

"A pretty young Ukrainian woman, for example, especially if she's blonde and blue-eyed, costs $100,000 plus — as much as a Rolls Royce. Others will be cheaper but not by much."

The Los Angeles-based author says oil-rich sheiks and richly funded terrorists — who are known to party wildly while gearing up for strikes — are major buyers of women who have little hope of escaping.

Many of them, the adult, are still drugged senseless when they are auctioned off to the highest bidder and rushed to harems all over the Middle East as well as Afghanistan and Pakistan.

"Most are abused sexually and physically and many die young," says Ronsard. "It's not unusual for a young woman who was kidnapped and sold into slavery in her late teens to look like a woman of 50 in just a few years.

"That's why there is such a huge turnover in slaves and why demand constantly exceeds supply.

"The men who buy and enslave these women demand much and give little in return."

Jan Jodlowski, 23, knows that better than most. Kidnapped from a movie theater in Lublin, Poland, in 1998 she spent four hellish years as "concert No. 1" in Arab oilman Talaat Mohammed Jamal's harem of 21 women.

She says the sheik subjected her to countless humiliations and degradations, including forcing her to "pleasure him" in front of foreign dignitaries and perform grotesque sex acts with other women, animals and his friends before he was arrested on a terror charge and she was freed.

"He destroyed my life," she told Ronsard during an interview for the expert's book. "Before I was kidnapped, I had planned to marry my childhood sweetheart. We were going to have three or four children and a good life.

"Now I can't bear the thought of spending time with any man. All I want to do is crawl into a hole and die."

Says Ronsard: "Eastern European women are prime targets because they are considered beautiful and are relatively easy to obtain. Corrupt officials in many countries are paid off by slave traders to 'look the other way' while they kidnap women.

"Most of the girls are from poor families and are lured into slavery by the promise of a good job in the West. Others are simply snatched off the streets.

"Many of the girls think that they won't spread their tentacles even further as demand grows.

WE WENT trick-or-treating a little early this year and found these star-spangled sweethearts. Not that anyone could mistake these two treats for a trick! The lovely on the left is Lisa, a model whose credits include several magazines, calendars and TV shows. The blue-eyed blonde is 5-foot-7 and measures 36C-24-35. On the right, magnificent Mandi's a cosmetologist and model who also competes regularly in horseback barrel-racing events. Green-eyed, 5-foot-4 Mandi measures 32DD-24-34.

Flatulence crisis hits epidemic proportions

SECOND-HAND GAS KILLS 130,000 AMERICANS A YEAR

WEEKLY WORLD NEWS MEDICAL ALERT!

By MICHAEL CHIRON
Correspondent

KNOW the facts — before it's too late!

FEDERAL HEALTH officials are expected to soon issue a report warning the public about the dangers of second-hand gas. Human gas, that is.

"Second-hand gas, if inhaled on a regular basis, can cause headache, irritated eyes, emphysema, asthma, bronchitis and in many cases, heart attack," says a physician with ties to the Centers for Disease Control.

"Each year, approximately 130,000 Americans die from second-hand gas — and many others suffer serious ailments as a result of long-term exposure.

"Gas-passers and non-gas-passers alike must realize the extent to which breaking wind — commonly called 'farting' — damages everyone's health."

According to the soon-to-be-released CDC report, each year second-hand gas causes:

- 800 heart attacks
- 230 strokes
- 30,000 asthma attacks
- 60,000 cases of earache

Due to poor dietary habits, there is now an "epidemic" of flatulence in America, the report warns. The average American produces a staggering three pints of gas and breaks wind 14 to 23 times daily.

In the past, flatulence — caused by bacteria breaking down food in the large intestine — was thought to be merely embarrassing to the gas-passer. And of course, annoying to others, who are forced to contend with the unpleasant odor generated by sulfur in the gas.

But in more recent years, physicians have recognized that chronic flatulence can cause heart-attack-like pain and commonly recommend to sufferers a diet low in foods that produce gas, such as beans and cabbage.

"Now the attention is turning toward second-hand gas," explains Dr. John Herlway of New Zealand, a leading authority on the medical woe.

"The problem is trace amounts of sulfur are inhaled into the lungs. If you live or work with someone who lets loose particularly noxious, frequent 'duffs,' it's like living next to a polluting factory's smokestack.

"The effect on your lungs, heart, your entire body, can be devastating."

Sources say the report, due out next month, will outline recommendations to state health officials, including dietary guidelines aimed at winning the war on flatulence and proposed regulations to limit gas-passing in public.

"If you're living with someone who breaks wind constantly, understand that this is a sick person who is slowly killing you too," says Dr. Herlway. "Encourage this person to seek the appropriate medical treatment — and you owe it to yourself to move out if they refuse."

MOM DEFENDS SON'S RIGHT TO PASS GAS

MAD-AS-HELL mom Mary Meekins bopped her son's chemistry teacher on the head with a rolling pin after the guy peddled the boy for passing gas — and lots of it — in class!

The 47-year-old woman was charged with assault in connection with the attack on Robert Cramer, 32, in the teacher's parking lot at East High School in Sydney, Australia.

"He had no business peddling my son's gas to the whole class," observed and I'm not sorry," Meekins told reporters. "Passing gas is natural. My son couldn't help it."

Cramer, who was hospitalized overnight for a concussion, says the woman's rolling pin "was a far more formidable weapon than my paddle."

He also claims that Mother Meekins' classroom gas attacks "rattled the blinds" and went "far beyond belief and responsibility."

NEW STUDY REVEALS: GALS WITH BIG BOOBS HAVE BETTER MEMORIES

CONTRARY to their "big-headed blonde" image, women with larger breasts have better memories than flat-chested gals, a surprising new study reveals.

Researchers in Denmark conducted memory tests on 324 female subjects and also measured their cup size. And on average, the better endowed the woman was, the higher they scored on the tests.

The female hormone estrogen, which enhances breast development, may also improve the function of the area of the brain responsible for storing and retrieving information, the scientists theorize.

SURFER GHOUL!

Ghost of dead California gal haunts Malibu Beach!

By MIKE FOSTER
Correspondent

AUTHORITIES in California are investigating reports of a beautiful blonde ghost haunting surfers at Malibu Beach!

At least 42 eyewitnesses claim to have seen the eerie figure, often trailing their surfboards underwater, staring at them with cold, dead eyes — and chillingly, in some cases, trying to drag surfers off their boards.

"I was about 30 yards from shore, trying to execute a spinner, when I saw this blonde chick, about three feet below the surface, right beside my board," says a shaken 24-year-old surfer named Chad.

"She was facedown and was somehow keeping up with me, even though her arms and legs didn't seem to be moving.

"I thought, 'Whoa, that's some cool trick,' and I crouched down to get a better look. That's when she reached up and grabbed my left ankle."

The watery wraith's iron grip felt "like a skeleton's fingers," but Chad managed to keep his balance and his cool, kicking her off, maneuvering away, and hightailing it to shore.

"I don't even want to think about what would've happened if I'd wiped out," he says.

On a lighter note, in some cases, the specter shows a more playful side.

Police, who are downplaying the investigation, don't know what to make of such reports, but confirm that many come from solid citizens.

"It's not just a bunch of longhaired stoners. We've received reports of sightings from people out on expensive yachts, including a celebrity lawyer you've seen on TV," says a law-enforcement source.

Respected paranormal investigator Carl Dunkland has been looking into the case. He says his research points to a leggy blonde surfer girl known only by her handle Dudette Dana, who vanished beneath the waves while surfing in a storm six years ago and is presumed to have drowned.

"She fits the physical descriptions provided by eyewitnesses," Dunkland says.

"Even more important, the behavior of the ghost matches Dana's. This is a very aggressive, angry entity, just as she was in life.

"She's not even dressed in the bikini she was wearing when she died, but in a favorite party outfit: Tight jeans and a tighter top."

"She would do these crazy stunts around the pier," recalls a lifeguard. "We'd warn her, 'You're going to get killed someday doing that stuff.'"

In July 1997, Dudette Dana gambled with her life and lost while surfing during a powerful storm against the advice of more-experienced surfers.

Two days after her body washed ashore, but a beach goer named Wally claims he saw the phantom surfer girl emerge from the waves around sunset on August 28.

"She was unbelievably lovely and all I could do was stare with my mouth open as she marched straight toward me," he recalls.

"I was trying to come up with a good pickup line, but when she got about two feet from my towel, she disappeared into thin air."

MEET SANDRA

THE WORLD'S FIRST HUMAN KANGAROO!

By MICHAEL FORSYTH

JUMPING JAMBO!! Loving mom Sandra Cronquist becomes a human kangaroo to better nurture her newborn baby.

WHEN first-time mom Sandra Cronquist takes her newborn baby Tyler out for a spin, he's always warm and snug — because she totes him about in a pouch implanted on her tummy!

Sandra is the world's first human kangaroo, surgically outfitted with an artificial pouch like the ones the huge marsupials use to carry their young.

"A few months after I got married, I was at the zoo with my niece looking at the kangaroos and I was explaining to her how the females keep their newborns safe and warm," explains Sandra, 29.

"It suddenly hit me that when I had my baby, I wanted him or her to experience that same feeling of security. I decided to get a pouch — and, hard as he tried, my husband couldn't talk me out of it."

Sandra did research in the library and on the Internet and was surprised to find that no woman had ever been outfitted with a kangaroo-type pouch before. The Los Angeles resident called over two dozen surgeons before finding one willing to perform the procedure.

"You could tell by their tone most of them thought I was nuts," she recalls.

"It was helpful that Mrs. Cronquist, who had been overweight, lost 40 pounds in preparation for the procedure, so we had a lot of excess skin to work with," Dr. Sankansky explains.

"The pouch was fashioned by folding a rectangular skin flap and anchoring it to the abdominal muscles.

"The result is a large, front-facing pocket capable of comfortably accommodating a typical six-month-old of 15 to 20 pounds."

The pouch was in place a full year before Sandra became pregnant, and used only to hold "small items like

"I have to take Tyler out to breast-feed him," Sandra says. "When we're at a restaurant and I suddenly pull a baby from my pouch we get lots of stares."

But the reaction from strangers is overwhelmingly positive.

"Young couples will come up to me and politely ask me about the pouch," she says. "They'll ask if it's natural, and when I laugh and tell them no, the wives are often very interested in having one put in themselves."

Dr. Sankansky predicts "maternal nurturing pouches" will become popular.

CRAM-&-SCRAM

Yummy! This fast-food joint serves nothing but grease!

By ARNIE OBERLE
Correspondent

AMERICA'S socially responsible fast-food chains are adding heart-healthy salads and sandwiches to their menus at a record clip, but a new franchise promises to turn back the clock and fill the fried-food void by offering up more greasy grub than you can shake a stick at.

Cram-&-Scram, as the in-your-face chain unabashedly calls itself, will feature fried hamburgers, fried chicken, fried hot dogs, fried fish, fried peanut butter sandwiches — like Elvis ate — and its self-proclaimed specialty, tasty French fries done to a tee in vats of yummy bubblin' lard.

And you don't have to worry about somebody trying to palm off a fat-free yogurt or berry cup for your desert, either.

At Cram-&-Scram, it's gigantic, sugar-boosted donuts, each a full

"And we aren't scrimping on portions or trying to make our customers feel guilty about eating hearty," says franchise founder Chris Bottalon, of Milwaukee, Wis., who plans to have restaurants up and running in all 50 states by spring.

"At Cram-&-Scram, words like 'small, medium and large' aren't even in our vocabulary. Our sizes start at extra large. And if that's not enough to make you loosen your belt or pop a button on your shirt, you can go for our jumbo and super-jumbo sizes.

"Our message to America's fatties is simply this: 'Welcome home, obese ones. Here is the food you enjoy, the food the do-gooders of the world want to deep-fry.'

"You won't find 'hippie critter' like lettuce, carrots or any other rabbit food in our restaurants. We sell fat, pure and simple.

"Over 100 million Americans are overweight — they like their food fried and they like it piled high. Why should they be denied the chow they love just because the 'health crowd' thinks it's bad news?

"Cram-&-Scram says: Belly up to the table, gorge till you puke, then come on back for more. We'll be waiting for you — with the deep fryer on."

No word yet on whether existing Checkers will hit back at Cram-&-Scram by adding super-greasy foods to their menus.

But an industry analyst says it's highly unlikely "because those are established restaurants that have nothing to win and everything to lose. Their future is in healthy fare.

"Only an upstart like Cram-&-Scram could pull off something like this. Frankly, I'm betting on them to succeed."

In fact, Bottalon — who weighs 312 pounds and counsels people never to eat a hamburger that hasn't been fried in its own fat with lard added — says focus groups "are going wild over our menu and the whole concept of giving people what they want, not what they need."

And he says doctors and nutritionists who already are screaming bloody murder over Cram-&-Scram's marketing strategy "are playing right into my hands."

"The more they squawk, the more free publicity we get," he explains. "And it doesn't take a Sigmund Freud or Dr. Phil to figure out that once fat folks hear about us, they're going to buy food from us.

"So I tell them to pitch all the hissy fits and temper tantrums they like. Ultra high-fat, ultra high-calorie foods — served up hot and

WE ALL know that the favorite fantasy of most guys is a bedroom romp with two women — and now it looks like what's good for the goose is good for the gander. The number of women who dream of doubling their pleasure, doubling their fun, has skyrocketed, an eye-opening new survey reveals.

The shocking poll, taken in Britain, shows that a whopping 72 percent of men enjoy the three's company fantasy — while more than 35 percent of women secretly yearn to be simultaneously pleasured by two males.

And the rates among open-minded American gals may be even higher, sexperts suggest.

ONE-NIGHT STAND: Tiamic Tonya's fling with lightweight alley cat was all it took.

AVERAGE
4.5-pounds each!

WEEKLY WORLD NEWS, OCTOBER 26, 2021

TUBBY TONYA, the world's fattest cat, has become a heavyweight in the mom division — she's given birth to the world's fattest kittens!

The four tabby felines, Todd, Tommy, Tara and Tessa, bounced into the world on August 1 weighing an average of 4.5 pounds apiece — more than 16 times the size of a typical kitten -- and heavier than a normal lion cub.

You might expect the fantastic foursome to be bigger than average since mom Tonya is a staggering 72 pounds, 0 ounces. On the other hand, because Dad is a scrawny little alley cat who "can't weigh more than 6 pounds," the behemoth like bulk of the lovable litter comes as a welcome surprise to owner John McElroy.

"I was mad as hell when I found out that sneaky little tomcat seduced Tonya and I caught him screwing around with her up on the roof," says McElroy, a 51-year-old carpenter.

"I was surprised Tonya didn't just eat him and make him like a big-time way as she deals with mice.

"I thought 'Well

THE FABULOUS FOUR, from left, Todd, Tommy, Tara and Tessa weigh in at an average 4.5 pounds and are doing fine

I guess we'll be seeing a litter of cute little cats.' But instead Tonya gave birth to four little giants."

The colossal kittens have continued to pack on weight since their birth. At ten months of age they tipped the scales at 13 pounds — far bigger than a typical adult house cat and more than twice the size of their scrawny father.

Normal newborn kittens eat six times a day. These guys have to be fed 10 to 12 times a day," McElroy says. "They exhausted poor Tonya's teats with their nonstop nursing. After the first month she dragged herself into a corner and started whining for liberty."

McElroy and his live-in girlfriend hotlike feed the humongous furballs a special high density "milk shake" usually used to fatten geese to feed the livers of cats and tigers.

Each can gulps down about two quarts of the food a day," McElroy says. "Monday morning we put that bottle down before they're ready, they'll scratch at you."

Tiny Tonya has been a celebrity at McElroy's hometown of Cape Town, South Africa, ever since last year when she shattered the petite cat world record, held by a 24 pound plus eared King, Rusty Jobs.

And she made headlines again when Boris and Helga, Siberian world famous as the world's tallest twins, were arrested for attempting to kidnap her as they [illegible] reported in our May 27, 1997 issue. A court ordered the superstitious siblings to undergo psychological testing.

According to McElroy, traumatized Tonya used up one of her nine lives when Russian Boris, who weighs at least 250 lbs., accidentally sat on her during the course of the bizarre botched catnapping.

"It's a miracle she wasn't squashed to death," the doting pet-owner says.

Over the past two years, the tubby tabby has also survived:

■ Choking on a turkey leg.

■ Nearly drowning when she coaxed her owner's sailboat to capsize.

■ Falling 16 feet into a ravine when her weight caused a wooden bridge to collapse.

The proud parental unit says that he's gone to be down all the cat tricks — because they love getting into trouble almost as much as they love food.

THE WALK OF THE SKELETONS

On Halloween skeletons rattle along the halls of ancient abbey

By MICHAEL CHIRON
Staff Writer

ONE of England's most closely guarded secrets is the Walk of the Skeletons that takes place every Halloween in famous Westminster Abbey.

Since 1258 at least 3,000 people have been buried in the abbey including kings, queens, warriors and poets and at the stroke of midnight, once a year, many of them rise to take a stroll.

The abbey is closed to the public at midnight on Halloween says paranormal researcher Agnes Spooner. "That is the time the witching hour, when the skeletons often rush to the aid of the hundreds walk over the high altar along the nave and back again.

It is believed that every Britain monarch since the time of Henry VIII, excepting the present queen, has been privileged to see the skeletons walk. It is a rite of passage for members of the royal family.

But most need soft upper lips silently witness the macabre spectacle. According to eye-witness accounts of the skeletons' march and return at an undisclosed time, the person is touched by the spirit.

Rumor has it that Princess Diana and Prince Charles witnessed the walk in 1981, shortly before their divorce, and that one of the celebrants gasped a year later to die.

"Diana's untimely death is the latest in a long line of tragedies that have befallen those who have witnessed the walk," Spooner says. Despite all efforts by the Prince of Wales to alter her demeanor, she understandably rattled — and sure enough, within two years, she died in a tragic motor car accident."

Eyewitnesses say the skeletons, some still clad in armor or purple robes from royal funerals, do not talk. The only sound is the soft click, click, click of their dry bones — a chilling event for those who see the walk described it.

Spooner notes that Halloween night has been considered a night of evil in the British Isles since Druid times — when the ancients believed it was the one night of the year when the dead walked the Earth. And Westminster Abbey, the setting for every coronation since 1066 — is a sacred place "brimming" with spiritual energy, she claims.

"Even during the rest of the year, one can sense there the presence of the spirits of dead Britons of the past," the researcher says.

As she has every year for the past decade, Spooner is petitioning Queen Elizabeth for permission to set up video cameras and special sensing equipment to capture tangible evidence of the supernatural phenomenon. But most likely as in years past, she'll get a royal thumbs down.

"It's an invitation-only event," she says. "Sometimes a famous author like Oscar Wilde or a newly knighted person will receive an invitation to watch the solemn

56-YEAR-OLD MAN DECLARED WORLD'S HOPSCOTCH CHAMPION

EXCLUSIVE POLICE BEAT

By JOE CRAFT
Crime Reporter

COP WAS TV REPAIRMAN WITH A BADGE!

CRIME BLOTTER

LAUNDRY THIEF BEATEN TO DEATH: Cops, but they're mighty tough on crime in South Africa. Cops say a gang of vigilantes beat a man to death in the KwaZulu province — because they thought he was stealing laundry from clotheslines!

Detectives who examined the body of the 34-year-old thief say he died from head wounds, adding: "The victim was beaten up by the community and was fatally injured after they caught up to him. He was suspected of stealing clothing from washing lines of various residences."

ARRESTED MAN TOO TIRED FOR BED: Some men will do anything to avoid making love to their wives. A Croatian man says set his house on fire to avoid the act.

Ervin Gulotta, 36, just before he got two years in jail for arson, told the judge he was too tired for sex, so he started a fire behind his house and accidentally set the whole place ablaze. He and his frustrated but unharmed wife were rescued by firefighters.

STOPPING STOP TELEVISION: A red light usually means stop. But at an intersection in Chile, two women used it as the signal to go-go-go — into a strip routine.

Cops in Calama say the women undressed in front of drivers who were stopped at the light. They then walked around the cars, asking for money.

Neighbors say the bare-chested beggars showed up at night with a stereo system, and start to bump and grind every time the light changed.

Although several dozen shirts and determined cops rushed to the scene, at last report the exotic light stripteasers were still at large.

RED-FACED lawmen say they may have to free dozens of dangerous cons — because they were arrested by a man who was only posing as a police officer.

"Muggers, armed robbers, gang leaders, even two murderers — at least 40 violent criminals are behind bars today because of [redacted] the man we thought was Officer Medina," says [redacted] spokesman for prosecutors in Mexico City. "And now it appears [redacted] arrests were illegal."

Officer Medina [redacted] was arrested on suspicion of being a police officer and now faces up to 20 years behind bars. His attorneys are pursuing for a suspended sentence in consideration of his years of service to the community.

The recipient of many commendations in his 13 years on the force, Medina was exposed by a clerk gathering paperwork to promote him to [redacted]. No proof could be found that [redacted] had ever been sworn in as an [redacted] broke downtown contestant.

Medina [redacted] told investigators that he had been retired there times by the police department because of an old knee injury.

"He told us it had always been his dream to be a police officer, so after the civil rejection he bought himself a uniform and insignia and just started [redacted] says one of Medina's former neighbors.

"He single handedly eliminated [redacted] traffickers near the schools in his precinct. Everyone in the street loves him — even the criminals he arrested him."

"All a lawn here since before I was. He taught me practically everything I know about being a cop on the street."

But Miguel plans to come down hard on the imposter. "Medina broke the very law he claimed to be upholding," he says. "And as we now are [redacted] out, he may have done more harm than good."

Since [redacted] never drew a police paycheck, he supported himself by [redacted] as a part time TV repairman.

RAP SHEET

INVESTIGATORS think 50 Cent has enemies in shooting

CROWD PANICS AMIDST SHOOTING BY 50 CENT GANG

NEW JERSEY police say 50 Cent was with a group who shooed gunfire outside a hotel, and they were trying to get the rap star to come in for questioning.

A Jersey City police spokesman says 50 Cent was one of about 12 people who showed up on a hotel surveillance video last month. One of the group fired "at least 10" gunshots outside the hotel, says the spokesman, but at press time investigators hadn't confirmed whether 50 Cent himself was the shooter.

The rapper didn't respond to a request to answer questions about the incident, he says.

It's not clear what sparked the shooting, which does not appear to have injured anyone.

The incident adds to speculation that another bloody war could be under way among rap stars like 50 Cent, who's been trading public insults with Ja Rule. Only weeks ago, two men on opposing sides of that feud were shot and killed — and New York City cops acknowledged they were SHOCKED cops were forced to rescue a suspected burglar who was hanging from the 22nd floor of a building he was trying to rob.

Officers say the man had been stealing from an office building in Guangzhou, China, when he heard security guards approaching. So he tied a computer cable to a window and began to lower himself to the 21st floor.

Unfortunately, the cable wasn't long enough — and he couldn't get back up.

The hysterical thief hung between floors, more than 200 feet above ground, for two hours before cops finally helped him back inside.

A MUST READ FOR EVERY LOVE-STARVED WOMAN:

I MARRIED A VAMPIRE – now I'm one of the undead!

By VICKIE YORK
Entertainment Editor

EIGHT months ago, long-time Weekly World News reader Clarice Porterville says she made the biggest mistake of her life: She married a vampire, hoping to "change" him.

Now she says she's joined the ranks of the undead herself — converted by her bloodsucking husband!

"All parents warned me not to go through with the marriage. My friends all warned me, but I didn't listen to them because I was madly in love," Clarice wrote in a startling letter mailed to WWN.

"I thought love could conquer all, but I was wrong and I've paid a high price for my naivete. My soul.

"Now I, too, am a creature of the night — a cruel, ruthless, unclean thing driven to prey on normal people and drink their blood.

"Instead of partying with my friends as I used to, I spend my nights prowling the shadows, hunting for victims. And by the time I might squish into a hole like a rat away from the scorching rays of the sun."

Clarice, 28, of New Orleans says she was swept off her feet when she first met handsome, black-garbed Dimitrie Dumont at the Big Easy.

"He was suave, sophisticated and with a sexy foreign accent," she [illegible] that [illegible] people in New Orleans are into that [illegible] didn't take him seriously.

At [illegible] Dimitrie [illegible] that he was an ordinary human.

His apartment [illegible] Lalaurie [illegible] she recalls.

Dimitrie claimed to be more than 200 years old, a 6th-century prince who was [illegible] by a beautiful gypsy [illegible] on Christmas Eve 1820.

After three weeks of dating, he told me he loved me and that was the sole thing going into the willingness [illegible] to take me, she says.

Deeply moved, Clarice told Dimitrie she wanted to help him and in what she now recognizes was the act of utter stupidity, bedded him for the first time.

"I truly believed a good woman's prayers and the love of a good woman could turn him straight," Clarice says. "I thought it would be like saving a rabbit from an NRA meeting."

The two were wed under a full moon in February. Their honeymoon, Clarice says, was that Dimitrie would [illegible] drinking her blood. But not long after their wedding night, he drank [illegible] and sank his fangs into her neck.

It was terrifying and yet in [illegible] Love [illegible] I prayed he'd [illegible] and the pain [illegible] fade, but at the same time I didn't want it to stop. The next morning I felt drained and weak.

Every night after that for two weeks he had [illegible] and weaker.

Then one night I happened [illegible] Dimitrie [illegible] he said that I'd created [illegible] a vampire.

I [illegible] him he was crazy, but within a few hours I was overcome by an irresistible thirst for human blood. I had to drink.

THE BITE MARKS that plunged Clarice Porterville into the nightmare world of vampirism.

And there's nothing glamorous about the vampire lifestyle, reveals Clarice. "We're always searching for blood," she writes. "Sometimes we're lucky and we'll meet vampire groupies who remain willingly. Many times we jump homeless men, prostitutes or other people I wouldn't never have even touched in the past."

Clarice says she wrote her [illegible] letter to warn other young girls not to be led astray by [illegible] sexually magnetic vampires.

"Please, please, don't make the same mistake," she says. "I am driven to feed seven times a week on the blood of others. I haunt the dark and dirty places and my terrible hunger is never satisfied.

"I no longer love, no longer pray, no longer feel. I am no longer alive, nor am I dead.

BIGFOOT GRAVEYARD FOUND!

SCIENTISTS take extreme care

THE DISCOVERY of a mass grave in the Oregon wilderness has stunned experts who say the site is littered with the bones of hundreds of Bigfoot monsters — the most elusive creatures known to man!

"We've not only proved Bigfoot exists, we've proved he pos- [illegible] had dimensions far beyond every animal but man," say University of Oregon at Eugene researchers in their preliminary report.

The scientists refused to pinpoint the exact location of the grave to avoid a media circus.

But they confirmed reports that skulls and bones they have [illegible] "humanoid creatures" that stood up to nine feet tall and weighed as much as 600 pounds.

Astonishingly they add, some of the remains "are so recent they're mostly still supporting a colony of living Bigfoots are probably living within 40 miles

My America

By ED ANGER DOUBLE FEATURE

Readers fire back at Ed!

Every once in a while our controversial columnist Ed Anger gets a hankerin' to dig into his mailbag and, as he puts it, "see what the bedwetters are gibbering about now." Some folks shamefully support him, others are outraged or sickened, but no one is ever bored by what he has to say. About the only thing you can do is run for cover when Ed shoots off his mouth — and return fire if you dare . . .

DEAR ED, I can't believe that you have the unmitigated gall to suggest [redacted] American slaves who fled to Liberia were stupid and cowardly and would have been better off "toughing it out" over here. Don't you know anything about the numerous hardships that those poor African-American sharecroppers endured in the South? Obviously you do not. You should try reading a history book every once in a while, you ignorant redneck. Why don't you and your Ku Klux Klan buddies just go somewhere and die?

— Justin R., Washington, D.C.

Woo-hoo! Right on, Ed Anger! That stupid recall election in California was a great big joke, and your idea [redacted] putting all the candidates in a wrestling ring and making them duke it out was right on the money. Now that ridiculous fiasco is over and done with, but I think we ought to do the same thing with the presidential election. I'd sure [redacted] to see those wingy idiots fighting over the Democratic nomination get put in a ring and wrestle around until there was a winner. And can you imagine a chubby guy like Al Sharpton in tights? What a hoot!

— Robin L., Bishopville, S.C.

As a devout Catholic I was appalled that a columnist of your stature would actually propose that the U.S. army actually "liberate" Vatican City. None of your arguments make any sense. You favor installing a "red blooded" American priest as the new Pope even though most of the sex scandals have originated in our own country. I thought the days that I would be forced to read a bigoted anti-Catholic diatribe were over but obviously I was mistaken. I suppose next you'll say that the Pope is the Antichrist, eh?

— Brent M., Cambridge, Mass.

I want to applaud you for coming to the defense of that judge in Alabama (a truly great American) who had the Ten Commandments outside the courthouse, and I think your suggestion that every American post the Commandments on their front lawn is an excellent one. I am glad that someone has the guts to speak out in defiance of these atheist liberals who control the press. Keep up the good work, Ed! There's a special place in Heaven reserved for patriots such as yourself.

— [redacted], Ky.

As a veteran of the invasion of Grenada, I was absolutely outraged [redacted] suggesting that the Pentagon raise money by allowing gambling on the lives of U.S. soldiers. How could you be so incredibly insensitive? These young men are serving their country, may I remind you, sir. They're not there to provide entertainment for armchair warriors like yourself, as if they were greyhounds at a dog race. I cannot believe that you sit there and call yourself a patriot, while spewing out garbage that insults every single person in the military.

— Bill H., Santa Anna, Calif.

Ed replies: Armchair warrior? Sonny boy, I was dunking bullets in North Korea before you were born. And no one who fought in a war against some god-damned beach resort has the right to say squat about the military.

Thanks for having the courage to write that terrific column on Jessica Lynch. You're absolutely right. Ed. Women shouldn't be anywhere near a combat zone where they can be taken prisoner. These feminists have been pushing the idea of women in combat for years now. I certainly know I don't want my daughter to be drafted and risk being captured by some sex-crazed North Korean soldiers some day.

— Laura R., Hoboken, N.J.

Your column trashing Jessica Lynch was absolutely despicable. Does a soldier have to kill people to be a hero? Isn't it equally brave to survive a terrible ordeal, as Jessica did? I'll have you know that I intend to read Private Lynch's book as soon as it is published, P.S.: Remember, Ed, men can be sexually assaulted too, as they are in prison every day. — Megan S., Eugene, Ore.

Ed replies: Thanks for that disgusting reminder, little lady.

Ed says: TIME TO START SPITTIN' OUT BABIES, LAURA

EDITOR'S NOTE: Columnist Ed Anger penned this open letter to First Lady Laura Bush during her recent goodwill tour to Europe.

DEAR Mrs. Bush. I'm madder than Eleanor Roosevelt in a beauty contest at how you've been gallivanting all over Europe, hobnobbing with the likes of that crackpot Frenchie Jacques Chirac!

Sure, I bet you shared some great cooking tips with Mrs. Chirac and God knows, those poor Russian gals like Mrs. Putin could stand to learn a thing or two about fashion. But America needs you more right here — spittin' out babies. That's because this country is going to need a George Bush III.

The first President Bush was one of the greatest commanders in chief we ever had. He got those arrogant Japs in their place that time he puked right in their prime minister's lap. When was the last time you heard any one worrying about the mighty Japanese economy?

But since the second President Bush came along, he's been even better. He's whipping the world's ass in the Middle East, spreading freedom everywhere. And to keep the dynasty going, you've got to get in a family way, pronto.

Laura, I know at your age you might not look forward to changing diapers all over again and cleaning some little curtain climber around the White House. But it's your patriotic duty, plain and simple.

The way things are going right now, 40 years from now when George III is ready to run, the world is going to be a more dangerous place than ever. Who's going to deal with it? Some wimp deserter like Jimmy Carter? Nope, we need someone who has leadership in their blood, by jimmy.

I know you already have two daughters and are ready to. Being president is a man's job.

[illegible] who drew up the Constitution knew that's a bunch of bushwah. That came from a clan of goose-stepping moonshiners and every last one of 'em would up in the state pen.

I know you already have two daughters and are ready to. Being president is a man's job.

down to business. The Little "pen pal" may wear you out, but remember, your husband is fighting overseas fathering wars and trying to fix this mess mercenary — you owe it to him to keep that love machine working.

Laura, since [illegible], the last gal to give birth in the White House — I [illegible] it.

WEIRD SOUNDS IN YOUR CAR ARE NOT MECHANICAL, THEY'RE...

SPIRITS UNDER THE HOOD!

By DAKOTA LANE, arrangements

AN ASTONISHING new study shows that random, annoying car engine sounds can actually be a signal from dead loved ones or even anonymous spirits from a world beyond.

"Strange clunkings, intermittent whines and even flickering lights on your dashboard can mean that you're receiving a communication from the other side," says paranormal researcher Dr Robert Davenport, who conducted the study in conjunction with a major auto parts manufacturer.

So you can't just write these things off as part failures, loose or mechanical glitches. They might have a supernatural cause.

"Not only that, if you listen to the noises carefully, it might be possible to make out words – inaudible outer manifestations from spirits and entities who have passed before us."

INVESTIGATIONS ALWAYS LEAD TO STRIP CLUBS

EVER notice in movies, how nearly all criminal investigation have at least one stop at a strip club? Well, real-life detectives do the same thing, law-enforcement insiders say.

"Bad guys tend to hang out in bad places," an L.A.P.D. source explains. "Lowlifes congregate in so-called gentlemen's clubs, which are often financed with mob money. And liquor has a way of loosening their tongues.

"I can't tell you how many leads we've gotten on big cases by pumping strippers and hostesses for information."

NEW SURGE IN MOTHMAN SIGHTINGS

IF YOU see an eight-foot tall, winged humanoid flitting around your porch light don't be surprised. Sightings of the mysterious Mothman are at an all time high!

At least six sightings of the cryptid figure have been reported nationwide since January 1 – that's up nearly 600 percent from the previous year.

The Mothman has been widely considered a harbinger of doom, since the mid-1960s.

According to published reports, the moth-like being was also seen hovering near the World Trade Center on September 4, 2001 — a week before the terrorist strike.

LAUGHTER MAKES YOU LIVE LONGER

. . . and aids in healing everything from cancer to arthritis, say doctors!

By VICKIE YORK Correspondent

LAUGHTER is good for you — in fact it can add decades to your life!

"A vigorous laugh every day can increase your life span by as much as 30 years — and can help make you look 10 years younger," declares medical researcher Dr. Charles Rutherfeld of Boston.

"The great thing is that you don't have to find something funny. Just choose a quiet time of the day, sit in a comfortable chair, throw back your head and make yourself laugh.

"It takes some practice, but after a few weeks you'll be able to laugh uproariously at nothing — and you'll very quickly see the years drop away.

"Your eyes will sparkle, your skin will glow and wrinkles will disappear.

"You'll feel and look years younger."

Research shows that regular laughter lowers blood pressure and cuts the risk of heart attack nearly in half. That's because exercising the lungs, heart and muscles in the face and body is a great way to beat coronary disease," Dr. Rutherfeld says.

"That's why it's such a good idea to have a joke book close to hand in your bathroom at home.

"Keeping a personal video library of your favorite comedy films is terrific — but remember even laughing at a show on TV that you don't find especially humorous is wonderful for your health."

While many women dread developing so-called "laugh lines," the expert says that guffaws actually slow the effects of aging on skin and improves the complexion.

"Laughing exercises the facial muscles and increases skin flexibility," Dr. Rutherfeld reveals.

"Thirty seconds of laughter every day for two months has a greater youthening effect than a plastic surgery operation costing thousands of dollars."

the No. 1 enemy of good health.

A hearty chuckle has also been shown to have a positive effect on recovery from a host of other medical problems, including:

- Arthritis
- Acne
- Hemorrhoids
- Back pain
- Cancer
- Migraine
- Constipation

DRUG LORD COULDN'T ESCAPE JAGUAR CURSE

SUPERSTITIOUS Colombian drug lord Manuel Enrique Rodriguez received visions in the afterlife, cartel chief Pablo was warned still in 1999 when an old fortune-teller warned him that he would be killed by a jaguar. So he quit the business, hopped on a plane with a nest egg of more than $10 million and flew thousands of miles to England, where he settled down to a peaceful existence.

Although there are no jaguars in the wild in the area — just as there are no wild pigs — Rodriguez hired armed guards to patrol his grounds, doors and windows and installed steel bars on the walls.

But the jaguar curse struck when his wife accidentally ran him over in his own driveway on a foggy night, killing him.

Police say no charges will be filed against Rodriguez's widow.

Dear Dotti

AMERICA'S MOST OUTSPOKEN, IN-YOUR-FACE COLUMNIST

DOUBLE FEATURE

Why do guys keep calling & asking for a good time?

DEAR DOTTI: Lately I keep getting phone calls from strange men. It's the weirdest thing! And they all say the same thing. They go, "Is Ashley there?" And I go, "Yes, speaking." And they say, "I hear you're up for a good time." And I go, "I guess so. I have fun at fairs and the movies and the mall and stuff, but why do you ask?" And they say, "Hey, I'm talking about a good time, get it?"

And then they never really get to the point, plus I don't even know who they are, so I end up excusing myself and hanging up. I hope they don't think I'm being rude. What's going on? — Puzzled in Vancouver

Dear Puzzled, First off, it's time to change to an unlisted number. Second, you might ask yourself if you have any disgruntled ex-boyfriends who would wrote your name and number on a public pay phone. Third, you're a bridesmaid for not figuring this out for yourself. Hurry up and find a man with brains to marry, sweetie. You obviously need all the help we can get.

Mommy and Daddy won't let me watch my wrestling!

Dear Dotti: I'm eight and a major WWF Smackdown freak! My parents are not happy about it, and they always try and stop me from watching it. What should I do? — Wrestle Freak in New Orleans

Dear Wrestle Freak, Listen to your parents. And Vinny Vedrecchi and other morons watch that crap. Unless you want to grow up to live in a trailer and have people call you Skeeter, your time would be better spent doing your homework.

My clueless ex-girlfriend claims that I'm a lousy lover

Dear Dotti: My girlfriend just dumped me, and I can't figure out why. She says it's because I'm a lousy lover, but the fact is I'm well endowed and have invested in a number of sex toys. Can you help me figure out what's going on? — Lover Man in Helena

Dear Lover Man, It doesn't matter what size your package is if you don't know how to deliver it, moron.

Hey, Dotti: How old are you?

Dear Dotti: My friend Barney says that you've got to be pushing 80, but I say you're no older than 35. Who's right? — Your Fan in Quincy

Dear Fan, You are, of course. Collect your money. And if you're really a faithful fan of mine, you'll take a bus to Iowa and punch Barney in the nose for me. Thanks.

Send them your letters and questions — and let her tell it like it is. Write to Dear Dotti, c/o Weekly World News, 75 Kerr Ave., New Hyde Park, N.Y. 11040. Enter Dotti's e-mail address at www.weeklyworldnews.com

Should I get a boob job just to keep my stupid hubby happy?

DEAR DOTTI: My husband Earl and I have been married for seven years. Basically we've been happy, but in recent months we seem to have grown apart, and we just aren't as close as we used to be.

The thing is, yesterday Earl got this real goofy look on his face and suggested I get breast implants. Let's face it, guys like big boobs, and if that's what the trouble is, I'm willing to consider doing it. Should I? — Small-Busted in Yale

Dear Small-Busted: Your bosom isn't the trouble your idiot spouse is. If you get any operation, it should be a husband ectomy.

Cheapskate brother won't pay back the money he borrowed

Dear Dotti: Let me get right to the point. My brother keeps borrowing money from me, but he never pays me back. He's been doing this for years. At this point, I figure he owes me about $12,000! Every time I see him, I hint broadly about how I could use a few bucks right now, etc., but he never seems to take the hint. What should I do? — Hurting for Bucks in Kansas City

Dear Hurting: Allow me to introduce a new word to your vocabulary. No! Use it whenever your worthless freeloader of a brother asks for anything ever again. If you weren't such a pushover, there wouldn't be a problem in the first place, pealbrain.

Please print that advice you gave my friend again!

Dear Dotti: A friend of mine once had a clipping from one of your columns on his refrigerator — it was a wonderful piece of inspirational advice that you had written. Then my friend's house was hit by a tornado, and he lost the clipping. You were nice enough to reprint it after he asked you to, but sadly, his house was subsequently hit by another tornado, and this time he was blown away along with most of his property. They eventually found him, jammed headfirst in someone's chimney over five miles away. It was so tragic. Ironically, for the past few years he had worked at Christmastime as Santa in the local mall. Anyway, I wonder if you could print that bit of advice again? I'm going through some difficulties myself right now, and I could use the boost. — Seeking Solace in Omaha

Dear Seeking Solace: Hardly a month goes by when someone doesn't ask for my closest bit of advice, a universal message of hope and perseverance to all in need. Here you go:

Suck it up and settle it off

I'm on death row — but I swear I'm innocent!

Dear Dotti: I'm on death row and my time is up. The thing is, I'm innocent! I mean, yes, it's true that my wife was having an affair and that I knew about it, and yes, when the police arrived on the scene I was standing there with a gun in my hand directly in front of my wife's bullet-riddled body, and yes, the prosecution had a total of 17 witnesses at my trial, neighbors who testified they heard me screaming, "I'm going to shoot you, you cheating tramp" just before the six gunshots, but things aren't always as they appear! Will you please write a letter urging the governor to halt my execution? — Innocent in Amarillo

Dear Innocent: Sorry, but you're right where you belong. Now, if you'll excuse me, I have to go feed my cats. They're the only ones around here who appreciate me.

CONFIDENTIALS

Dear Harry Tongue in Cleveland: Your cats are perfectly capable of cleaning themselves without your help, you freak.

Dear High as a Kite in Greenville: You'll just have to choose between having a job or being a worthless druggie.

Dear Jodi Knight in Orlando: It's just a movie. Get a life, pinhead.

Dear Eager Beaver in Trenton: Cool your jets, Bucko. When a girl literally doubles over with laughter, it probably means "no."

Dear Getting Nervous in Washington: No, I don't know how to put a hex on someone, and even if I did, I've got nothing against Wesley Clark.

Dear What's the Problem in Gainesville: It's called soap and water, pinhead. Get familiar with it.

Dear Totally Hopeless in Juneau: I'm assuming you have two healthy legs, correct? Get out there and hit the pavement, you lazy bum.

Dear Cowed in Denver: If you lack the testicular fortitude to stand up to your mother-in-law, you're a first class wussy-boy.

...SHE SAYS

"I'm retaining my sense of humor whenever I go on a date. I'm sort of competing out there with other women and also with Samantha, because I think a lot of guys think things are going to work out the way they do with Samantha."

BLACK WITCHES SEEK ELIGIBLE MALES FOR EVIL GOOD TIMES ... POSSIBLE MARRIAGE

DON'T BOTHER walking [illegible]

LONELY black-magic witches are looking for a few bad men — to become their husbands!

The spell-casting bad girls are so eager to wed that one California coven has founded a dating service designed to forge love connections between wicked witches and marriage-minded bachelors with evil leanings.

"Eligible warlocks are sure glad getting rings! The worst of them have already been taken," says a black witch who calls herself Angelina Moonglaster, but is always willing to be wooed. The San Francisco-based coven

According to Moonglaster, there's no shortage of suitable consorts for white witches. While a few benighted Christians still condemn all practitioners of witchcraft, most Americans now appreciate the right of "good, white witches." Those who use their powers to help all others, and "black witches," those who deliberately inflict harm.

Since the mid-1970s, membership in white witches' [illegible] has grown from a few hundred to [illegible] in the U.S., and it's said that real life cases even helped to inspire the beloved television sitcom Bewitched.

"Do guys's don't have a problem with evil women," says Moonglaster. "There are plenty of virtuous male dweebs out there who are waiting to marry white witches.

"It's when you look for a boyfriend who is middle-of-the-road, sinful, immoral, ungodly and corrupt that you run into problems."

A man who knowingly marries a black witch [illegible] to [illegible] to [illegible] powers to achieve greatness [illegible] in business, politics [illegible]

Even the most ordinary men are frightened by such thoughts."

Pagan leaders estimate there are close to 10,000 black witches in the U.S. — many of them quite beautiful.

But only 10 percent are married.

In order to see that number rise to at least 25 percent, Moonglaster says:

"Every black witch should have her warlock."

Moonglaster's coven is beginning to place ads in magazines and on the Internet, touting the advantages of living the high life with an evil wife [illegible] a black

Among those are "powers beyond your wildest dreams," the ability to "crush your enemies," and a relationship with a lady who "has had with Lucifer, so you can bet [illegible] to trying anything."

The downside, a tiny disclaimer on each of the ads acknowledges, is "a high likelihood of eternal damnation."

HIGH-HEEL IMPLANT POLL RESULTS

IN OUR ISSUE of Sept. 2, 2003, Weekly World News reported on the alarming new practice of surgically implanting high heels into women's feet. We also conducted a poll, asking you, our readers, if this unconventional body mod either "sexy and breathtaking" or "stupid and dangerous." Well, the results are in, and surprisingly, a full 83% of you declared them "sexy

AFRICAN-AMERICAN WICCANS OBJECT TO TERM "WHITE WITCH"

THE nation's largest group of African-American witches is asking journalists to refrain from using the terms "white witch" and "black witch" from now on, complaining that the words help perpetuate racism.

Praying won't hurt your knees

By TAMMY SANDARI

GREAT NEWS for Christians and true believers everywhere — dropping to the floor to pray won't injure your knees as long as you stand up every few hours to stretch and relieve the pressure.

Doctors had long warned that long hours spent in prayer often on a hard surface such as tile, stone, linoleum or cement, like encountered in worship buildings called "clergyman's knee."

Similar to housemaid's knee, the ailment causes the front of the kneecap to become painful, swollen and tender. The problem was the so-called burns of the front of the knee, which can fill with fluid and hurt the joints — well as one physician puts it, "like hell."

"Happily for the saintly, the danger has been overstated," says sports medicine specialist Dr. John Russell, of Seattle Wash.

Clergyman's knee, though well represented in medical texts, is not likely to turn up in the worshipping pews. They spend more than two hours a day kneeling in prayer."

The good news has been hailed by preachers all over the U.S. who say there is rare no reason for the faithful to drop to the floor to petition God and begin repenting for their sins.

Though the phenomenon had been shown to the world by the Latter Shirley pentecostal minister Rev. William Branham of Raleigh, N.C. He has stayed and preached for hours on end without the perpetual horrors of "the dread affliction" weighing on his mind.

Physician clergymen like Rev. Branham credit the pews with preventing the malady.

Pews, which are often worn and slightly uneven, provide the perfect cushion for the knees. Parishioners can stop kneeling around the clock — and start praising the Lord's name.

This is enough to make the Lord thank you for your devotion, but you might also want to thank Kenneth Fergusson, founder of church pews in the Second Century A.D.

HALLOWEEN HOROSCOPE, PSYCHIC NEWS-YOU-CAN-USE AND MUCH MORE

HALLOWEEN is traditionally a time when the dead are allowed to walk the earth, hence the little ghosts and goblins that knock on our doors to trick-or-treat for candy.

But All Hallows Eve, as Halloween was called in the Middle Ages, is an important date in the astrological calender

The great medieval astrologer St. Anthony of Padua wrote that Halloween began a cycle of rebirth as Venus ascendant replaced powerful but moody Mercury in the star chart.

"Rebirth means growth and rapid change," says astrologer and psychic Charles M. Wesp, leader of WEN's team of 12 top astrologers. "The star charts on the following pages reveal the crystal ball secrets of SIZZLING SEX KAGS O' BUCKS and VIXI AND VIGOR and predict dramatic and exciting events over the four week period from October 16 to November 15. During this time you will see big changes in your life, look at them for the better as your sex life, financial affairs and health are reborn."

As an added bonus WEN includes three psychic guides on how to hex people you hate, how to avoid being possessed by a demon and how to spot space aliens living among us.

DUMP THOSE

WORLD renowned experts agree that possession by evil spirits, ghosts, demons and even the master of the underworld Satan himself presents a real danger to you and your family.

Although exorcism can oust these dreadful demonic forces, it is far better to prevent possession from ever happening than to undertake the dangerous — and sometimes deadly — removal of evil.

Demonic possession occurs in ordinary decent people all over the world but most often takes place in those with some part of vulnerability in their psychic aura.

For example, those who have recently been ill or are suffering the loss of love or grief over a death or injury are more likely to suffer possession than those with a strong aura.

But people can believe with great confidence that the evil spirits will be unable to enter them if they are protected by the following guide can help you strengthen it, bolstering your defenses against spiritual invasion.

The easiest way to repel evil from your body and spirit is by wearing or carrying a religious symbol like a cross, a Virgin Mary medal or a Star of David. This sends the message to your mind that you're spiritually strong, and often that is enough to send the wicked creatures scurrying elsewhere.

You can also repair vulnerabilities in your psychic aura by practicing a stress-relieving technique like meditation or biofeedback.

If you've suffered an extreme shock or sudden loss, you may benefit from exposure to relieve post traumatic stress disorder. In this regard one particularly susceptible to demonic attack.

Although possession can take place anywhere, most occur in the home. Prevent the devils and spirits from entering and they won't possess you or another soul in your abode.

Paint a red stripe on your front door step and a red cross outside your back door to stop the demons from entering — they won't cross these lines. Then plant rosemary just outside your door and sprinkle a few flakes of dried sage on all your windowsills to keep demons outside. Don't slip one in through open windows. Finally, hang a tiny mirror over each bed in your home to repel evil spirits from taking over the souls of sleepers.

Demons are powerful, and unfortunately sometimes even your best efforts won't prevent a loved one from becoming possessed. If you believe possession has occurred, it's easy to determine whether or not an evil spirit is present.

Preheat your oven to its highest setting. Put the photo of your intended victim on a baking tray, then place it in the oven. Keep a close eye on the photo, removing it just after it begins to brown. Don't let the photo burn!

Soon your victim will succumb to a nasty flu.

Are you bothered by a meddling busybody sticking his or her nose into everyone's business? Try this hex, and your tormentor's interference will soon be a thing of the past:

Get a photo or draw a picture of your tormentor's likeness. During the Full Moon, find a pile of dog poo, and (with a rubber glove or stick — not your hand!) smear a bit on the nose in the photo.

Then go out into your backyard under the Full Moon, and dance around while waving the photo over your head. Start chanting: Fall, fall, fall.

Continue dancing and chanting until you collapse into complete exhaustion. The next day your victim's nose will fall off — and they'll never be able to poke it anywhere again!

Has someone taken advantage of you — walked all over your feelings? Try this:

On [redacted] on, preferably with [redacted] tou[redacted] glass bowl.

Then for one week, beginning on a Tuesday evening, eat [redacted] the dirt. Use a different fruit each day. While eating the pear, say:

Fruit, fruit that used to be so sweet, I command you to turn into rotten feet.

At the end of the week your [redacted] ter's feet will begin to rot. And he or she'll never walk all over anyone again!

Would you like to test your ex, or

Gather a recent photo of your victim, a red line-tipped marker and some small curd cottage cheese.

On the night of a New Moon, doll this photo all over with the red marker, then smear curds of cottage cheese on the face. Then put the photo on a windowsill that will get morning sun, all the while saying:

Pox and sparks, beauty [redacted], ugly and gross, your ex's hatred do make.

Leave the photo on the windowsill. After three days your ex or cheating spouse will break out in a dreadful, cratelesque and unbearable itchy rash all over his or her body, becoming completely unattractive to the opposite sex.

Although these spells are easy and effective, you must always remember the basic rule of heaven:

That which you send out into the universe will be returned to you threefold by karmic law.

Undertake these curses at your own risk — they could come back to haunt you and you could suffer your own horrible fate!

WAS HITLER HEXED?

SPELLS and hexes may come in handy on a day-to-day, personal level, but history shows that they may also have been used to influence world events.

"I believe Churchill hired a witch to put a hex on Adolf Hitler," says renowned British historian Randall Keith-Newberry.

"It is well known that in the last years of World War II, Hitler became more and more erratic and irrational, making bad decisions that led to the downfall of Nazi Germany. Why?

"Now the thing is, Churchill had a friend who was apparently well-versed in the occult. He also knows who this friend was. On the rare occasions when he would mention him, Churchill referred to this mysterious man only as 'my most helpful magician friend.'

"Can a person use these? Sir, I'm simply a historian. I'm not going to comment on that."

GIVE an enemy what's coming to them, with spells and heroes to knock 'em flat with fly, body rashes or other maladies. Infect them with a viral bug and they'll never bug you again!

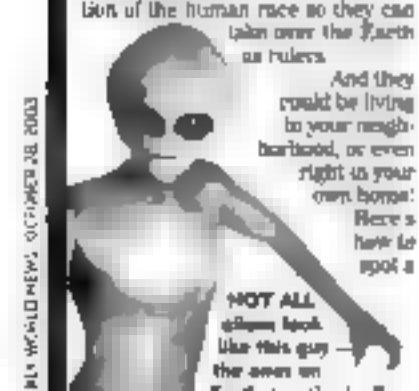
25% OF EARTH'S POPULATION ARE ALIENS!

World-renowned experts who study extra-terrestrials agree that approximately 25 percent of people on Earth, and almost 20 percent of household pets, aren't human. They're actually space aliens — visitors from faraway planets — in disguise.

They aren't sweet, funny aliens like the big screen's cute little E.T., or those fictional and amusing characters on Third Rock From the Sun.

These creatures are EVIL and DANGEROUS, bent on complete world conquest and the extermination of the human race so they can take over the Earth as rulers.

And they could be living in your neighborhood, or even right in your own home! Here's how to spot a visitor from outer space.



NOT ALL aliens look like this guy — the ones on Aliens are desperate to fit in with mainstream American society. They don't want anyone to suspect them of being anything other than the boy or girl next door.

However they typically behave strangely keeping unusual hours and eating strange foods.

And they often go completely overboard when celebrating holidays and traditions in an effort to appear normal. For example, if you've got a neighbor who goes crazy at Halloween decorating every room in the house and the yard, hosting a wild costume party and inviting all the neighborhood kids in to trick or treat — he or she is probably an alien.

Creatures from outer space love to host parties inviting others into their earthly home just to socialize, but to collect the DNA samples guests inadvertently leave behind: eat dishes, napkins, etc., for their evil research into how best to dominate the human race.

But aliens never host boring parties — they do everything to the extreme. For example, the neighbor who buys a flat-screen TV, decorates the house in team colors, bakes a football shaped cake and serves guests three all American giant sub sandwiches at a Super Bowl party for the entire neighborhood is most likely an evil alien.

Aliens are also extremely methodical and very neat. Have you got a neighbor who's a clean freak — with everything in place and perfectly maintained? Who spends every Saturday mowing the lawn, or she's a visitor from outer space.

And some aliens get jobs in beauty salons or dental offices in order to collect hair clippings and pulled teeth to send back to their home planets for use in experiments and research. Check out your neighbor's profession if you suspect he or she's not human.

Some aliens disguise themselves as household pets like cats or dogs so they can actually live with humans. They're especially dangerous as they're very difficult to spot.

But here are some hints:

Have you got a cat who dislikes fish or fish flavored cat food? Or a cat that never purrs? Or that seems fascinated with your bathroom habits, watching you shower and groom? It could be an alien in disguise — watch out!

Does your dog refuse to go out in the rain? Your pup could be a robot or alien worried about short circuits and rust. Or does your dog seem fascinated by the night sky, sitting and staring up at the moon and stars for hours at a time? Be careful — you're possibly harboring an alien in your home — especially if your dog howls.

If you do believe your neighbor or pet is an alien, you must be constantly vigilant and remember the word SURVEIL.

Suspect someone is an evil alien
Observe their movements and habits
Listen carefully to everything they say

DNA TESTS PROVE BODY FOUND IN IRAQ IS JIMMY HOFFA!

By NATE SCHUSTER

STUNNED U.S. soldiers have found what is believed to be Teamsters boss Jimmy Hoffa's body while searching for Saddam Hussein in northern Iraq. Pentagon sources [redacted] confirmed.

DNA taken from the surprisingly well preserved remains are said to match up with [redacted] held at FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C. Investigators are confident they are now a step closer in solving one of the most compelling mysteries of modern [redacted]. Who murdered Hoffa -- and why?

"Finding Hoffa's remains is a major development in a case that has lingered for decades," says author Robert Gage Kenderman.

"With his body in hand, it's going to be a simple matter to determine the cause of his death, which, if we're lucky, will lead us to the people who killed him.

"I'm hoping we find other evidence that will help us figure out how an all-American icon like Jimmy Hoffa wound up in such a God-forsaken place as Iraq.

"Everything is speculative at this point, but something tells me the body has been there since he vanished back in 1975. Then again, who knows."

"Maybe Saddam or a terror group like Osama Bill Laden's al Qaeda found the remains in the U.S. and took them to Iraq to hold for ransom.

"In a case this strange, no theory is too crazy."

The discovery of the body in an unidentified "municipal facility" in Tikrit, Saddam's hometown, on September 21 actually was announced [redacted] days after the mainstream media focused on domestic news including Congressional resistance to the Bush administration's request for $20 billion to rebuild Iraq, and Gov. Gray Davis's entertaining gubernatorial recall election.

But as rumors persisted of heavy and abrupt [redacted] Pentagon sources started [redacted]

And they revealed the body and other "identifying evidence" had been shipped back to Washington, where forensics experts hope to confirm the positive ID and establish a cause of death within the next few weeks.

Hoffa, who built the mighty Teamsters' Union from the ground up after forging an unholy alliance with the New Jersey mob in the 1950s and '60s, vanished on July 30, 1975, after mafia pals Tony "Jack" Giacalone and Tony "Pro" Provenzano invited him to lunch in Detroit, and then stood him up.

Hoffa called home to find out if they had called with a message — and he was never heard from again. A massive FBI investigation turned up nothing more than a couple of hairs and a few spots of blood in a car that Hoffa was last seen in, circumstantial evidence that wouldn't support an arrest.

Agents later decided that the union boss had been murdered. And even though they couldn't prove it, they said they believed his body had been liquefied in a Mafia-controlled fat-rendering plant that was later destroyed in a suspicious fire.

That theory "has pretty much been blown away" by the body parts turned up in Tikrit, says Kenderman, noting that the unidentified U.S. soldiers who found it had little trouble making a preliminary ID "because a thumb[redacted] on the [redacted] was [redacted] Hoffa — 1913-1975."

"I also have it on good authority that their commanding officers opened the casket and recognized Hoffa's face," continues the Washington-based author.

"From what I'm told, it was only moderately decomposed."

Not surprisingly perhaps, Jersey mob figures are said to be "keenly interested" in developments.

"The question is whether that interest is merely casual or if something more compelling is at play," says Kenderman.

"Are they interested because they like a good mystery? Or are they interested because they're culpable in his disappearance and murder?"

"With any luck at all, we won't have to wait too much longer on the street."

MEXICAN HAT DANCE ADOPTED BY SWEDEN

Upset over not having a national dance of it's own, Sweden has chosen to borrow the Mexican Hat Dance. Through an agreement mediated by The United Nations, Sweden has gotten permission to use the dance, and is now in the process of importing approximately ten million sombreros.

It was a Swedish politician, Sven Svernberg — head of the ministry of cultural affairs — who uncovered an obscure provision of international law stating that if a country does not use it's national dance for more than 25 years, it becomes fair game. It initially came down to the Morning Calypso Dance of Turkey or the Hopeg, the national dance of Siberia, where the participants smash down low, run towards each other at full speed, and butt heads — but both dances were [illegible] too dangerous.

DEODORANT MADE FROM REINDEER

The next time you tell someone they smell like poop, they may say "Thank you." Just as standard perfume is made from ambergris, which is basically whale vomit, a major cosmetics company in France has discovered a way to derive deodorant from a different disgusting source — horse manure.

French historian Rene Aubertheuse says "It goes back to the days of Napoleon, when soldiers in the field discovered rubbing horse manure into their skin warded — more or less — off an outbreak."

Scientists have finally confirmed what every geek knew all along — ties make women smarter! "Making whoopee releases the hormone 'oxytocin', which boosts intuition, increases creative energy and stimulates the brain," study author Dr. Marsha Rosner says. This suggests that frequent sexual encounters can give women the "intellectual edge" they need to get ahead while their geekish peers remain mired in mediocrity." U.S. TO INVADE LUXEMBOURG!

ONLY 998 square miles, Luxembourg united a butt-kicking nation this year when it helped to block NATO from joining Operation Iraqi Freedom.

SHOWING [illegible] Steamlined leadership, President Bush plans [illegible] add [illegible] tiny [illegible] Luxembourg to [illegible] growing list of conquests, according to a stunning published [illegible] port.

"We've tolerated the insults of that pipsqueak country for too long," Bush reportedly told the Joint Chiefs of Staff at a top-secret White House meeting. "It's [illegible] the 101st Airborne."

The [illegible] invasion plan [illegible] posed in the underground magazine Die Rasse Reinheit, published in neighboring Germany. Editor Hans Bletzer refused to divulge the sources for the story, but claims they include individuals at "[illegible] level white administration," [illegible] AFP.

"President Bush is furious at how old Europe continues to confront the U.S.," Bletzer says. "He feels America has to do something very dramatic to show the world who's the boss. Taking over a country in the very heart of Europe is designed to be a wake up call to the rest of the continent."

One of the smallest countries in the world at 998 square miles, the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg [illegible] kicking earlier this year when it [illegible] to block NATO from joining Operation Iraqi Freedom — igniting Bush's fury.

There are also economic reasons behind the push to liberate Luxembourg.

"The jobs of our nation's grape growers are in peril," an angry Bush is quoted as telling aides. "The Grand Duke's dumping of grapes on the U.S. market is an agricultural weapon of mass destruction."

The ostensible reason for the [illegible] emptive strike will likely be to protect the royal family from "imminent terrorist attack," Bletzer claims. But the regime-change goal is to lock out the monarchy and install a republic.

still reeling from the mess in Iraq.

"Unlike Iraq we can guarantee there will be no ambush and surprises," an aide is quoted as saying. "And rebuilding will just take a couple weeks."

But some Pentagon officials grumble at being asked to plan the invasion of a country two thirds the size of Rhode Island the invasion reports.

The four-star general who's been put in charge of what's been dubbed Operation Mousetrap reportedly asked the president "Where the hell is Luxembourg? I can't send in the 101st if I don't know where they're going."

The "Startle and Stupefy" air-ram paign phase of the war is tentatively scheduled to commence in the wee hours of the morning of January 1, with a ground [illegible] troops set for late afternoon.

Pentagon planners expect mopping up to be completed by 9:30 p.m.

Officially, the White House adamantly denies any specific plan exists to invade Luxembourg, a spokesman calling the country "a friend of the U.S."

PREHISTORIC PROPHET

Caveman artist had the J.Lo-down on Hollywood 30,000 years ago!

By JOE KELLY

ARCHAEOLOGISTS discovered dozens of paintings on the rock walls of a cave that chronicle many of the most momentous events in recent showbiz history.

But they were created more than 30,000 years ago!

The images show that a prehistoric penguin-eating artist drew pictures from the time of wife beaters — only to find such events as the Hollywood revolt election, Ben and J.Lo and even Arnold Schwarzenegger.

The team that found the cave used flint stone tools — says Dr Markley Chaille, head archaeologist at the La Rochelle excavation in France.

But the Neanderthal artist's portrayal of modern Hollywood stars clearly points to remarkable prophetic powers involving powers we can only guess at and envy.

And we can see what the drawings that we believe predict events that have yet to happen, like J.Lo and Ben finally tying the knot.

The Neanderthal Nostradamus entertained an amazing picture of us. Dr Chaille says archaeologists are now investigating why the Neanderthals disappeared so quickly for no apparent reason.

Some believe they were wiped out by the Cro-Magnon people, whose ancestors are us.

But the cave paintings show that the Neanderthals were also interested in the future and their own place in it.

Dr Chaille says: "The Neanderthal artist was clearly fascinated by the Hollywood phenomenon and was trying to predict its impact on his own culture."

The artist shows a man and woman standing almost side by side and pointing to the sky — where a crude spaceship is passing over them.

Many historical events are recorded on the cave walls, most of them relating to the Neanderthals' struggle for survival. Scientists believe these people were highly intelligent and had a complex language and social structure.

Dr Chaille says: "Perhaps through these paintings the Neanderthals wanted to record their own history for posterity."

Although Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck are the most startling and new art for Neanderthal eyes, Dr Chaille says there are other drawings of the same figure in different poses which appear to be a large, middle-aged man.

A large bird, which is clearly meant to represent an eagle, is also shown in the cave. Dr Chaille says: "It is the eagle which is the symbol of the United States of America."

A dark haired, muscular man with a guitar is also shown. Dr Chaille says: "We believe this is meant to be Elvis Presley in his later years."

A man shown on a chair is crowned headdress, holding a club as he looks over his shoulder at a figure. Dr Chaille says: "We believe this is meant to be Arnold Schwarzenegger, the actor turned politician."

Another picture shows a female figure with a crown and a man with a gun. Dr Chaille says: "We believe this is meant to be Hillary Clinton and Bill Clinton."

Dr Chaille says: "Perhaps the most startling picture is that of a man with a gun and a woman with a crown.

AMERICA'S SEXIEST SEERS

DOUBLE FEATURE

Let Serena and Sonya help you! Write: Astute, Weekly World News, P.O. Box 3038, Boca Raton, Fla. 33431-0936. We'll forward your letters to them. Don't send money. Their advice is free.

THOUGHT THE LIGHT: Tennis diva Anna Kournikova steps out of a movie premiere in New York. She can sure serve up some style, can't she, guys?

Is my new preacher in cahoots with the devil?

DEAR SERENA: We've got a new preacher at our church and even though he's handsome and smart, knows the Bible backwards and forwards, and heals the sick like there's no tomorrow, there's something about him that's extremely creepy.

He never says anything bad about Satan. And I've never once heard him tell a child or adult that they're going to burn in Hell if they don't do good deeds on Earth. I also notice that he has this strange way around pretty women. When he looks at them I'm sure he's hating — and for a split second, his eyes flicker between their normal blue and something that looks like the yellow-green color of a snake's eyes. Am I on to something — or not?

— Church Lady in Greenville

Dear Church Lady: Your new "preacher" is a shape shifting, literal worshipping demon who infiltrated the church to trick unsuspecting people into coming up with Satan. Go inland and confront him with what you know and watch him vanish! If there's one thing demonic entities can't cope with, my friend, it's the truthful light of day.

Dear Sonya: I'm getting married in January, and I've saved my virginity for my husband. But I'm scared to death that he's going to hate me because he's so, well . . . "big." Don't think I'm imagining things because I'm inexperienced — all of my girlfriends have noticed the same thing. Jack is the sweetest guy in the world and I know he'd never intentionally hurt me. If we have sex on our honeymoon, will I be O.K.? — Concerned in Biloxi

Dear Concerned: Jack's a lucky dude! Just like you say, but his mighty member is nothing special. According to my Ouija board, that big fat cucumber in panties? Get the picture?

Dear Serena: My husband and I desperately want a child but I can't get pregnant no matter how hard we try. We've been to fertility specialists — three of them — and they all say we're healthy. Help! — Anxious in Houston

Dear Anxious: Those specialists are wrong, dear. You have a hormonal imbalance that's jumping up the scale. Quitting that high-stress job of yours will bring you back into balance and pave the way for several pregnancies — the first of which will produce a beautiful baby boy by this time next year.

Dear Serena: Somebody at work sneaks out to the parking lot every day and siphons all the gas out of the boss's car. This has been going on for two weeks now, and he's offered a $500 reward to anyone who can nail the culprit. I really need the money, Serena. Please, tell me who it is. — Employee in Kannapolis

Dear Employee: The culprit isn't one of your co-workers — it's the boss's wife. And she knows all about your affair with him and is just trying to put the kibosh on those daily "lunch meetings" you've been sharing in that cross-town motel. For her sake — and yours — please come to your senses. Not only are you destroying his marriage, you're doing grave damage to your own.

Graveyard zombies tried to burn down my house!

DEAR SERENA: You've got to help me before I go crazy — or get killed. I recently moved into an old house I picked up for a song because it needs a lot of work and it's situated behind an old graveyard.

Everything was fine at first. But then I started hearing screams and moans at night that I'm sure are coming from the graveyard. One time I ventured outside to investigate and saw what looked like hundreds of zombies carrying torches in a big circle around my house. I fired my shotgun at them and they disappeared. But I have a gut feeling they'll be back — and this time they'll burn down my house with me in it. I hope you don't think I'm crazy, Serena. Please help me — before it's too late. — Worried in Baton Rouge

Dear Worried: Everything will be fine if you follow my instructions to the letter. First purchase a big box of rock salt and spread the crystals in a circle around your house. Second, buy pine or juniper incense and burn a few cones as close as possible to your front door. Third, clip my photograph out of this week's paper and take it into the cemetery by light of day. As you enter the graveyard, shout "In the name of Serena Sabbak, I forbid you to enter the land of the living!" As you finish speaking, raise my photo high over your head. Wait then drop it, letting it drift to the ground. As it does, turn [illegible] walk back to your house [illegible] the right from then on.

Dear Serena: A psychic who works for a women's magazine I like to read charged me $100 to look into his crystal ball and tell me that I would meet the man of my dreams in August. Well, it didn't happen. Can you help? — Devastated in Baltimore

Dear Devastated: The "psychic" you consulted is [illegible]. As you know, Serena and I never charge for advice — and here's some for you. When you bump into a stranger wearing an eye patch in the office elevator next week, don't be shy — ask him out. He is your soul mate. And if you do as I suggest, you'll find great and lasting happiness that will last [illegible] life.

Dear Serena: Where I'm at home it seems like every time I look up there's a big blue jay perched at our through a window. And when I walk outside, he flits from branch to branch following me like he can't bear to have me out of his view. And he cackles, too. Like a chicken. Instead of making that "screeching" noise blue jays usually make. I like birds and all that, but this is getting creepy. What do you think? — Wondering in Portsmouth

Dear Wondering: My crystal ball has been on the "unacceptable side" lately, so I sneaked a peek at Serena's and here's the skinny. That jay is the reincarnation of a lover you had in a previous life back in the [illegible] — a life that ended along with his in a fiery car crash. You weren't to blame, as you were reborn as a human. But he, being guilty, was returned as a long line of mostly ugly critters, including a worm, roach, caterpillar, silverfish, spider, bedbug and now, finally, a jay. He cackles to show he's "different." If you want to be REALLY nice and show him all is forgiven, your fine, feathered dude LOVES stale bread — the

Whose lipstick is on my husband's shirt?

Dear Sonya: I found lime lipstick smeared all over my husband's shirt — and I don't wear the color. Whenever I'm upstairs I'm doing something I shudder to even think about all around the shirt collar — the front side and the back. What's going on. — Heartsick in Cleveland

Dear Heartsick: Your hubby isn't cheating on you, he's trying to spice up your love life by making you jealous. You'll find the tube of lipstick he used to "erase up" that shirt in his medicine cabinet.

Did Granny go to Heaven?

Dear Serena: My grandmother died a few weeks ago when she slipped and fell on the bottle she tried to hide my husband with. Granny wasn't a bad person. But when she got up over 30, she just couldn't hold her liquor anymore. My question is this: Did she go to Heaven? Please tell me she did. — Anxious to Find

Dear Anxious: Your Granny will eventually go to Heaven but she has some "purgatorial duties" to pay first. I suspect you'll bump into her somewhere and continue your chats over the next five years. After that, she's got nowhere to go but up!

Will I ever be happy?

Dear Sonya: I'm a 43-year old woman and life holds no meaning for me. I'm terribly tired and have no zest for living like other people. Why am I so miserable? Will I ever find happiness? — Weary in Paris

Dear Weary: As a matter of fact, lady, you WON'T find happiness — at least not in THIS lifetime. Seems you were a blue death romp buckaroo in your last life and you're paying the price now. I do see you finding a little peace of mind — and I do mean "a little" — a few minutes before you die in the year 2000 at the grisly old age of 106!

THE ANTICHRIST WAS A SPINELESS CHICKEN FARMER

— says top theologian!

By RUTH GRAHN
Correspondent

THE Antichrist was actually a chicken farmer who went by the name of Al Ghani Kassab Sakher — until his untimely death this year

THE COMING of the Antichrist as predicted so frighteningly in the Bible's Book of Revelation was a major flop, says a top theologian.

"He's been and gone and nobody even noticed," declares Dr Hermann Sommer of the University of Ibbenburen, in Heidelberg, Germany.

"The Antichrist was supposed to be a 'doom deal threat' who would torture torment and enslave every human on Earth.

"Instead he was born in Saudi Arabia, emigrated to Lebanon and spent his entire life raising chickens and kids.

"He was a real hust."

Dr Sommer says he began to investigate the whereabouts of the Antichrist in 1978 after Vatican informants told him that the so-called "master of all evil" was "sprinkling his strength in Lebanon."

Accompanied by two priests, the professor of theology and author of numerous scholarly articles on Bible prophecy tracked him down in 1980.

"But instead of finding Satan's right-hand man," he says, "I found a henpecked chicken farmer with three crusty nosed children and an extremely fat and nagging wife.

"He admitted that he had been chosen by Satan for the task of taking over the world and crushing, as he put it, all that is good and decent in the human spirit, but he felt he just wasn't up to the job.

"'I had no training,' he told me, and he said the whole scheme — beginning with his rise to prominence as an ambassador to the United Nations and continuing through his assumption of world control via the Battle of Armageddon — was just 'Let somebody else be the Antichrist.'"

According to Dr Sommer, the man, who called himself Al Ghani Kassab Sakher "didn't deny that he still thought highly of Satan."

But he explained that after moving to Lebanon he refused to ever perform any of the creepy rituals — such as animal and human sacrifices, kinky sex ceremonies, and holding black masses — that are associated with hard-core Devil worship.

In a strange twist, Al Ghani died just months ago in August, when hundreds of chickens overdosed on pesticide sprayed into a cage while he was spreading their feed — and pecked him to death, says Dr Sommer.

The theologian went on to say that the Vatican is well aware of Al Ghani's bizarre life and even stranger demise. But has chosen not to address the issue apparently feeling it best to keep its flock living in fearful fear of the Antichrist and the End Times.

Dr Sommer's account of what's become of the Antichrist met with out its critics and doubters. One, Dr Esther Rothing, also a Theologian at the University of Dusseldorf, doesn't doubt that her colleague found him.

"I just don't buy the story that he was picked to death by enraged roosters and hens," she says. "As a believer in the Bible as the infallible word of God, I have to think that Mr Al Ghani is still alive.

"And if that is the case, the threat remains that he will rise to power and flood the world with evil."

Dr Sommer says: "Everyone is entitled to believe what he or she wants to believe, but I will say this: Even if the Antichrist were alive, his ability to take over the world is nil, past."

IF YOUR best bud or some strange party girl collapses of a drug overdose at a crowded rave, DON'T try to revive the victim by stuffing ice cubes up his or her butt, medical experts warn!

6 6 6 DEVIL'S HOT NEW GAME IS ALL GET-OUT!

SATAN'S evil minions will be the hottest young cult group in "pick three" lottery games, an eye-opening new study reveals.

"Based on lottery results in Florida, California and New York, 6-6-6 is hands down the luckiest numerical combination you can play in games that require you to pick three numbers," the study's authors say.

But the news isn't all good. Around 666 A.D. the experts say, the people actually play it — because they are afraid the Devil will "steal their soul" if they try to cash in.

A SMALL village in Siberia is populated almost entirely by people who are left-handed.

Kivrak, which boasts all of 687 residents, has been the focus of several scientific studies since 1953. Still, no one has come up with an explanation for the bizarre phenomenon.

"There's an overriding genetic link between most of the population, which was the one thing I would have expected to provide a clue as to what's going on," says researcher Chris Ecclestone. "It really is a mystery."

Priest plans to exorcise the Devil while baby's still young and weak!

NEW MOM Belinda Moret is the first to admit that her 12-fingered, yellow-eyed infant is "different" and "special." But she refuses to believe, as her preacher is saying, that the little boy "is the evil spawn" of Satan.

"Just because he isn't like other children doesn't mean he's the Devil's baby," a clearly distraught Moret, 22, told reporters in Sacramento, Calif.

"I might not know who the father is, and I might be a single mother, but that doesn't automatically make me a bad person. And it doesn't make my baby a bad person either.

"I don't know what to do," she added. Tears streaked down her face. "I'm afraid for me and my baby."

Rev. Paul Markleson, of the extremely conservative First Light of the New Church of Jesus Christ, agrees with Moret — in part.

He says the unwed mom who admits to having had casual, unprotected sex with multiple strangers before she turned her life around "is on the right track and has come a long way," since she joined his congregation last fall.

But he insists that 4-month-old Frankie Moret — whose first words, the preacher says, were "the Devil" instead of "da da" — is another matter altogether.

"I pray to the Lord for answers and all I hear back is that the baby is Satan's baby," warns the preacher, who is backed, he says, by all 175 members of his close-knit congregation.

It's not just the 12 fingers — that's a fairly common genetic flaw. But the boy also has the yellow-green eyes of a demon, and a long, slender tongue that's forked and constantly flicking just like a snake's.

"These aren't birth defects like a handicap or unformed ear. These are features that inherit from a parent.

He didn't get them from the mother — she's perfectly normal. And since she didn't breed with a snake, he must have got them from something that looks like a snake.

"And that something is the Devil."

Doctors who have seen the baby say that was born in a back room at the First Light church with the help of a midwife agree that it's unexplainable — although they don't dispute the strange features of the kid that, according to his mother, he was born three weeks premature.

If their explanations are correct, then as the eyes mature, they'll darken to a normal shade of green or brown as the genes alter. And his thin, flicking tongue might plump up and stay inside his mouth.

That's not good enough for Rev. Markleson, who is going to conduct an exorcism to banish Satan while the baby is still young and weak.

But Moret, to date, won't give her permission, saying she is torn between her newfound faith in God and her maternal instincts — which are telling her to protect my baby no matter what.

"I've seen movies and documentaries on exorcisms and I'm afraid he'll get hurt or killed," she explains. "And when I hold him in my arms and look into his little eyes, all I can think is how wonderful he is.

"I don't want to have bad thoughts. I don't want to look at him and see Satan."

Says Rev. Markleson: "I'll be meeting with Belinda and asking God to open her eyes. Either we drive Satan out, or take baby Jon to live with his father. The

What, me worry?

SO YOU'RE standing in the jaws of a dinosaur that looks like it could snap at any moment and crush you like a puny prehistoric snack. Should you worry? Of course not — it's not the real thing but an artist's sculpture of a dinosaur's skeleton, on display in downtown Beijing. CHIMP ARRESTED FOR RECKLESS DRIVING

COPS were stunned when they stopped a speeding convertible — and discovered that the driver was a chimp.

The vintage Cadillac was clocked by police radar going 95 miles per hour in a 60 mph zone on the Canadian Turnpike near Toronto.

Police say the car was weaving dangerously between other vehicles and passing on the shoulder of the road. Officers pursued the car with flashing lights and sirens before it was pulled over.

A chimp was sitting behind the wheel of the vehicle, says officer Richard Dunham. "He was initially very cooperative and passed a field sobriety test."

Dunham says he searched the car and found a large bunch of bananas on the passenger side seat. There was also a propelling pencil hidden in the trunk. The monkey was wearing a seat belt and was [illegible] to avoid citation for the radar.

"He handed me a driver's license and the photo was nearly him," Dunham says. "He was wearing glasses in the photo, but it was definitely the same chimp. The monkey was released [illegible]

He wasn't wearing his glasses, say cops

LUDE CHIMP Adult Pennsylvanian was cited for reckless driving and disorderly conduct, after same alleged monkey business on the Canadian Turnpike

[illegible] first-time violation of Motor Vehicle Regulation 12.

The chimp had a valid Canadian driver's license, since there is no age requirement for obtaining one, and appeared to have passed the eyesight test. [illegible]

The Canadian Department of Transportation refused to comment on the case.

A representative said, "We have a copy of [illegible] driving exam where he had a passing grade of 82. The DOT does not [illegible] unless there is evidence that the driver's driving privilege should be suspended."

[illegible] for speeding and reckless driving. However when Dunham was writing the citation, the chimp became impatient and quite agitated. He started to scream and then threw a tantrum at the officer, striking the cop on the shoulder. Dunham then called for backup. The incident resulted in an additional charge of disorderly conduct.

Pennypacker and the 1955 Cadillac are both owned by Michael Collins, a retired Toronto businessman who purchased the monkey last year as a birthday present.

"I've never done anything like this before," Collins claims. "I don't [illegible] I've been out and had a ticket before. I might run to drive so he can still go to the store and buy me groceries and cigarettes. Normally he comes right home. He must have gotten distracted since he's very easily led astray. I am very disappointed in the chimp."

Police have not yet determined if Collins has violated any laws, but they said, perhaps ominously, "Our inquiries are continuing."

As for Mr. Pennypacker, if reliable sources serve, that type of punishment will be administered. Typically the offender calls a maximum 30-day jail sentence. However, chimps are not allowed to serve time in the Canadian prison system.

Most legal experts believe the likely outcome is that Mr. Pennypacker will be sentenced to 30 days in the

A CAT can curve its back into a high arch because it has [redacted] loosely connected vertebrae, compared to humans who only have 34. Scary [redacted] king Vincent Price almost became a gourmet cook instead of an actor. Americans spend about $2 billion a year on Halloween candy.

That's just a sample of the frightening Halloween facts — and other astonishing trivia — that reporters and editors at Weekly World News have unearthed while researching all the terrific stories you read in our paper every week.

Here's more

● Talk about an involved dad. The father sea catfish keeps the eggs of his future kids in his mouth, until they're ready to hatch. He doesn't eat until they're born.

● Scary costumes, weird decorations and eerie noises are fun parts of Halloween, but in the beginning they were ways to keep evil spirits away. The ancient Druids of the British Isles believed that at harvest time, the dead were wandering around looking for bodies to take over. So people tried to make themselves and their homes as wretched and ugly as possible, so the spirits would leave them alone.

● A Saudi Arabian woman can divorce her husband if he doesn't get her a cup of coffee.

● Polls show that 86 percent of Americans decorate their homes at Halloween. And 8 percent dress up their pets in Halloween costumes.

● The ancient Egyptians' head pillows were made of stone.

● Toward the end of her life, famed actress Sarah Bernhardt had a wooden leg and often wore it on stage. At age 78, "the Divine Sarah" was still able to pull off the supreme role of Shakespeare's Juliet.

● Mary Shelley, author of the classic creep-out novel Frankenstein, was the wife of romantic poet Percy Bysshe Shelley.

● The phrase "the apple of his eye" originated in ancient Hebrew literature and referred to the pupil of the eye.

● About 1,800 people live in Antarctica in the winter, and about 2,000 live there in the summer. More people fill a football stadium for one game than have ever been in Antarctica, which is nearly twice the size of the United States.

● In 1982, several people died after taking Tylenol. Investigators found someone had slipped cyanide into the pill bottles and placed them at random in drugstores. Tylenol's maker, Johnson & Johnson, immediately launched a $125 million recall of 31 million Tylenol bottles. The company developed a new tripled-sealed package that would make tampering impossible to hide. With those actions, experts say it took Johnson & Johnson only two months to resurrect its ruined image and regain 98 percent of its market.

● In New Guinea, widows of the Asmat tribe roll in the mud to mourn their late husbands. They believe that [redacted] only shows their anguish but also masks the woman's scent from his ghost!

● Gorillas rarely drink, and when they do it's by soaking the back of their hands and sucking the water or dew from their fur. They get most of the liquid they need from the food they eat.

● Jack-O-Lanterns are a Halloween tradition that started with an 18th-century Irish folk tale. According to the tale, a miserly drunk named Jack trapped the Devil in the branches of an apple tree. When Jack died, he wasn't good enough to get into Heaven — but the Devil, still ticked off about Jack's little trick, wouldn't let him into Hell either. So Jack was forced to spend eternity wandering around with a lantern made from a hollowed-out turnip lighted by a piece of coal.

● You may think it's normal to be scared of Halloween, but there's an actual disorder named for the creepy feeling: Samhainophobia. It's derived from the ancient pagan festival of Samhain, when people believed all spirits of people who'd died in the previous year would return to haunt the living.

● Chicago's tallest structure, the Sears Tower, rises 1,454 feet in the air. From Monday through Friday, about 16,000 people work there — which may be why it has its own ZIP code: 60606.

In 1932, actress Lillian Millicent Entwhistle climbed to the top of Los Angeles' famed Hollywood sign and jumped to her death from the H. In 1987, Pennsylvania politician H. Budd Dwyer called a press conference before being sentenced in federal court for bribery and conspiracy and fatally shot himself while TV cameras rolled.

● If you had bought a single share of Coca-Cola stock in 1919, when the company went public, it would have been worth $92,500 in 1997.

● The first Halloween movie was so low-budget, wardrobers had to go to a costume shop for their most important piece: The mask worn by terrifying villain Mike Myers. They used a mask of actor William Shatner's face, which they painted white.

● The Three Musketeers are Porthos, Athos, and Aramis. The most famous Musketeer, D'Artagnan, joined up later.

THE TRANSFORMATION of a human being into a wolf or other animal is called lycanthropy.

SANDY FACTS

● The Dutch consume about 65 pounds of candy per person a year. People in the U.S. eat about 21 pounds a year. That's more than a pound of candy a week for folks in the Netherlands.

● The biggest candy-selling holidays in order are: Halloween, Christmas, Easter and Valentine's Day.

● It is against the law in Idaho to give anyone a box of candy that weighs more than 50 pounds, even if they are Dutch.

● During ancient times the Egyptians, the Arabs and the Chinese prepared confections of fruit and nuts candied in honey.

● In Europe during the Middle Ages, the high cost of sugar made sugar candy a delicacy available only to the wealthy.

● Boiled sugar candies were enjoyed in the seventeenth century in England and in the American colonies.

● Hershey's Kisses went out of production during World War II because the silver used to wrap them was necessary for the war efforts. A special candy bar was produced for troops in the field.

● Candy makers are permitted to substitute other ingredients, usually vegetable oils, for cocoa butter. However, that mixture cannot legally be called chocolate. The term used is "confectionery coating."

● First manufactured in 1930, the Snickers bar is the number-one selling candy bar in the United States.

THE COVER-UP OF MARILYN IS ALIVE!

By RHEA CHONG
Correspondent

SCREEN goddess Marilyn Monroe is alive and well and living in Hawaii.

Dozens of sane and rational eye-witnesses who say they spotted her on a beach claim she didn't die in 1962, but is puttering around at the ripe old age of 77.

"I saw Marilyn Monroe — and she is alive," Jenny Navar, 52, told celebrity reporters and photographers who converged on Honolulu after news of the sighting.

"She was wrinkled and a little hump-backed like any other little old lady. But Marilyn is Marilyn — there's no mistaking that face."

Navar and 25 other locals and tourists are said to have seen Monroe at private and secluded Papohaku Beach, Molokai, on the morning of last September 28.

The spot is accessible only by air-plane or boat. And as Navar later told newsmen, when Marilyn stepped off a twin-engine runabout with the help of two muscular young men, one wearing a shoulder holster, nobody had the nerve to approach her.

But another tourist, Sally Maltby, says that while everybody else stood around slack-jawed or whispering excitedly she took a deep breath and called out her name.

"Marilyn stopped dead in her tracks and hesitated, like she couldn't make up her mind whether to acknowledge me," says the 47-year-old investment banker from Seattle, Wash.

"She started to turn toward me, but the man with the gun started shaking his head very emphatically, and she stopped.

"Then she turned and started walking away from all of us. I was about 50 feet away and there's no doubt in my mind who it was. It was Marilyn Monroe."

The idea that Monroe might have faked her death and gone into hiding at the age of 36 isn't as farfetched as some might think.

By all accounts, she was wildly successful — but deeply troubled — when she abruptly "vanished" from public view on Aug. 5, 1962.

Circumstances surrounding her alleged "death" have been shrouded in mystery from the outset.

Official claims that she committed suicide by overdosing on sleeping pills have always been suspect, with many people believing that President John F. Kennedy and his brother Bobby, both of whom were involved with the curvy actress, had her murdered when she threatened to reveal devastating personal and political secrets.

Erik Jaye Ramone, who has written over 50 magazine articles on Monroe, says he "has always entertained the idea" that the actress faked her death.

"I think the Kennedy brothers,

WHY SHE HAD TO DISAPPEAR

MARILYN MONROE had at least four good reasons to fake her death and go into hiding on Aug. 5, 1962, when many felt the screen goddess was at the height of her career.

Among those compiled by author Erik Ramone:

1. The pressures of superstardom and demands of Hollywood were taking a terrible toll on Monroe, who fought back by gobbling prescription sleeping pills and painkillers and drinking heavily. Like rock giant Elvis Presley, who vanished from public view in 1977, the actress may have faked death, which would have enabled her to escape the glare of celebrity and reclaim her life.

2. Monroe is believed to have been intimately involved with both crooner Sam Giancana and singer Frank Sinatra, who she reputedly had mob connections. Some theories that she may have been privy to information the mob wanted kept under wraps — perhaps even a plot to kill both John and Bobby Kennedy.

3. Monroe's love affairs with the Kennedys weighed heavily on the actress, especially when it occurred to acted in her as a human being than they were in her ability to excite in bed. Friends agree that if nothing else, her love sessions with the Kennedys launched Monroe on a wild emotional roller coaster — and she seriously considered going public to embarrass the brothers.

Based on that threat, Ramone says a couple of scenarios could have come into play. "It's possible the Kennedys threatened her, which may have scared her into faking her death to escape their wrath," says the author. "It's also possible that to keep her from going public, they gently 'persuaded' her to go into hiding — and instead of killing her could have helped her pull it off," he says.

"They had the ways and means to make something like that happen for her.

"Faking your death and going into hiding is extremely difficult for anyone, much less a celebrity with one of the most recognizable faces in the world.

"It's doubtful she could have done it alone — but she certainly could have done it with help."

Witnesses say they later saw clients of policemen on the beach, obviously searching. But by then Marilyn and her escort were long gone.

It. Two months before she "died" Marilyn had been fired by Fox Productions for repeatedly failing to turn up on the set of the film Something's Got to Give. The production was never completed, even though Marilyn was replaced by actress Lee Remick.

"There was a lot of talk among friends that Marilyn didn't feel she could fulfill her obligations in her current state of mind," says Summers. "It's entirely possible that she got scared and faked her death to get out of the contract. That might sound crazy to you and me, but at the time Marilyn was so paranoid about her enemies that she would have done anything to get away from them."

On May 19, 1962 Marilyn was booked to perform at President Kennedy's birthday celebration, where she sang a sensational version of "Happy Birthday" to the President.

Terrorists or geeks could end the world

SCIENTISTS are certain that civilization will screech to a halt when a doomsday virus launched by a terrorist or a geeky teenager shuts down the world's computers!

They are sure the virus will strike in 2004 — if not sooner.

"Bank records will be lost, defense systems will fail, nuclear power plants will melt down, power grids will fail — and that's just for starters," says a State Department report slated for release in November.

"Once infrastructure crumbles, humans will rely on their most basic and violent instincts to survive. Murder and mayhem will be the order of the day."

"Only a miracle can stop societal collapse,' " the State Department report says.

EX-HUBBY TURNS INTO GRAVEYARD GHOUL

A MAN'S heart broke so completely when his wife left him that he ended up in the cemetery — even though he's not dead yet!

Pedro Franco Rios, 40, has been living in the graveyard in Las Rios, Ecuador for four years — ever since his cheating spouse ran off with his best friend.

"My heart felt dead, so I decided to get used to being dead," down-in-the-dumps Rios told a local newspaper.

The cemetery-dweller, who sleeps beside gravestones with a blanket and a pillow, survives on food donated by grieving folks who come to visit the dear departed and take pity on the graveyard's soul living resident.

Baby born in a baby

EXCITED Catherine Jaffre gave birth to a 9-pound baby girl who, minutes later, gave birth to an 8-ounce baby boy, say doctors.

"This condition is called 'fetus in fetus' and it is extraordinarily rare," Dr. Joel Lemoine told newsmen in Paris.

"The baby girl is doing fine. But the baby that was growing inside her — a twin that was absorbed into her body while they were
